THE people of Memphis have long hacause of complaint against the Water Compeny, and through the APPEAL have fre quently made it. Sometimes the quantity, or, as it is technically called, the service, is not all that was promised; sometimes the water is too muddy, and sometimes it smells us if thick with decaying vegetation and every drop was an essential poison. Sometimes all these com plaints have been justified at one time, and then there has been no limit to the indignation of a long-suffering people. Just now this is the case, and the APPEAL, mind ful of its duty to the public, has interviewed the president of the Water Company to know if it was possible in the near future for that organization not only to fornish clearer and purer but a more pleatiful supply of water. The result will be found in another column. From this it will be seen that President Latham, as we have known, has for a year or more been industrious in seeking means whereby that greatest of all bless ings, clear and pure water, can be supplied in desired quantity to all classes of the pacple of Memphis. He has pot, as many persons doubtless imagine, been supine or indifferent. He has all along realized the justness of the complaints of the people, and has been auxious to remedy them. To that and, he has been in treaty with many leading engineers and ingenious inventors. His correspondence with these has been long and protracted, but he has reason to believe that he has been fully compensated for the delay in the result. In a few months he will have in operation one of a series of mammoth filters that will clear the Wolf river water, and at the same time he may, perhaps, be able to supply clear and pure water from an artesian well which parties now in the city are under cortract to begin to sink within the next two weeks. This, he says, is the best he can do toward satisfying the just demands of the people. He feels keenly the situation of the company and has chafed at the delays to which it has been subjected, but he hopes for a farther ferbearance and indulgence by the public until the result of boring by the Artisian Well ogramme for the occasion:

Learning that the Water Company was engaged in efforts to improve our water supply, an APPEAL representative yesterday visited the office of the company in search of facts. Explaining the object of the visit, and expressing the hope that the report was well-founded, he asked the president of the company if he had anything to say which he was willing about be placed before the public.

Judge Lasham expressed regret that the report had absained circulation until further progress had been made with certain experiprogress had been made with certain experiments now under way, as he had hoped that their success would be the first notice to the public that the experiments were in progress. As it had become known, however, he would state that the company had had the question under constant investiga ion ever since the erection of its new machinery, and that so soon as an ample quantity was provided, and full provision made for reserve machinery, he addressed himself to the matter of improving the quality of the supply.

First he visited the few cities having filter beds or reservoirs and found none giving satisfaction; the one at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., being the nearest approach to success, though

He next investigated various systems of clearing water under pressure by means of large filter-stateched to the mains. This, if feasible, be thought far preferable to the act-tling reservoir, against which there is a growing prejudice with sanitarians, who insist that still water soon becomes foul. Especially would it be condemned in our warm climate. He exhibited the drawings of a filter he has ordered as a test to be attached to a small main. If satisfactory one of the largest made will be ordered; and if that gives satisfaction, a sufficient number will be erected to filter the entire city supply.

The following is the proper name for the coursion:

In answer to a question as to an experiment with wells, of which the reporter had heard, Judge Latham explained that a year ago he visited a firm engaged in sinking wells in the Northera States, and though not favorably impressed, he continued the investigation. In the company's anxiety not to neglect any reasonable effort, they authorized him several weeks since, though wholly incredulous, to contract in reference to the aclis, which he did. The contractors have unbounded confidence in their success.

There are hundreds of consumers, large and small, using five, ten or twenty time as much water as they pay for. With clear water we could introduce meter, with great profit. With such inducements to active, the company will, if possible, work out some plan or other for materially improving the public water supply; and I beg to assure the public that the question of any reasonable expenditure is not an obstacle. We would gladly make the most liberal outlay for a reliable system. Indeed, we could not afford not to do so. West and South it is turbid, though not generally unwholesome. East and North it is polluted and in many cities wholly insufficient in quantity. Objection-side as may be our supply, many cities owning their works, after spending millions, have no better or clear evaler than Memphis. But the inferior water of other cities does not clear ours. I refer to it only as evidence of the difficulty in finding the remedy. If within our reach it will be found. If, in our judgment, not possible under present plans, others will be tried.
